

Early Journal Content on JSTOR, Free to Anyone in the World

This article is one of nearly 500,000 scholarly works digitized and made freely available to everyone in the world by JSTOR.

Known as the Early Journal Content, this set of works include research articles, news, letters, and other writings published in more than 200 of the oldest leading academic journals. The works date from the mid-seventeenth to the early twentieth centuries.

We encourage people to read and share the Early Journal Content openly and to tell others that this resource exists. People may post this content online or redistribute in any way for non-commercial purposes.

Read more about Early Journal Content at <http://about.jstor.org/participate-jstor/individuals/early-journal-content>.

JSTOR is a digital library of academic journals, books, and primary source objects. JSTOR helps people discover, use, and build upon a wide range of content through a powerful research and teaching platform, and preserves this content for future generations. JSTOR is part of ITHAKA, a not-for-profit organization that also includes Ithaka S+R and Portico. For more information about JSTOR, please contact support@jstor.org.

A River Journey. By FRANCIS W. PARKER AND NELLIE LATHROP HELM. New York: D. Appleton & Co. Pp. 277; illustrated.

This book is the fourth of the series published under the title of "Uncle Robert's Geography," and edited by the late Francis W. Parker. Uncle Robert takes two of his nephews on an extended geographic field trip to study the Wisconsin River. They secure a small boat at Wausau, Wis., and with a camping outfit start downstream. On the way the boys discover and solve many problems associated with the work of rivers and with the history of the particular valley through which they are passing. The field trip continues to the famous "Dalles" of the Wisconsin River, near Kilbourne City. From the educational standpoint the field trip is well planned and conducted. The account of the journey is given as a narrative and reported through the conversations which were held on the journey. The book will be of value not only in connection with school work, but also for general reading for young people.

W. W. ATWOOD.

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO
School of Education